Understanding different types of texts

Critical Thinking

A Group Work: Discuss the questions.

1. What happened to you today?
2. How do you record your everyday story?
3. What is an unforgettable story that happened to you?

B Collaborative Practice: Work in groups. Take turns telling your partners an unforgettable story that happened to you. Then choose the best one and share it in class.

Example:

The best story that I know is about a family dinner. A man went to a restaurant after work. He waited for his family for more than 30 minutes, but no one showed up. He took out his smartphone and wanted to make a phone call. Then he saw the date and found . . . it was the wrong date.

Online Research Skill

Using Specific Words and Questions

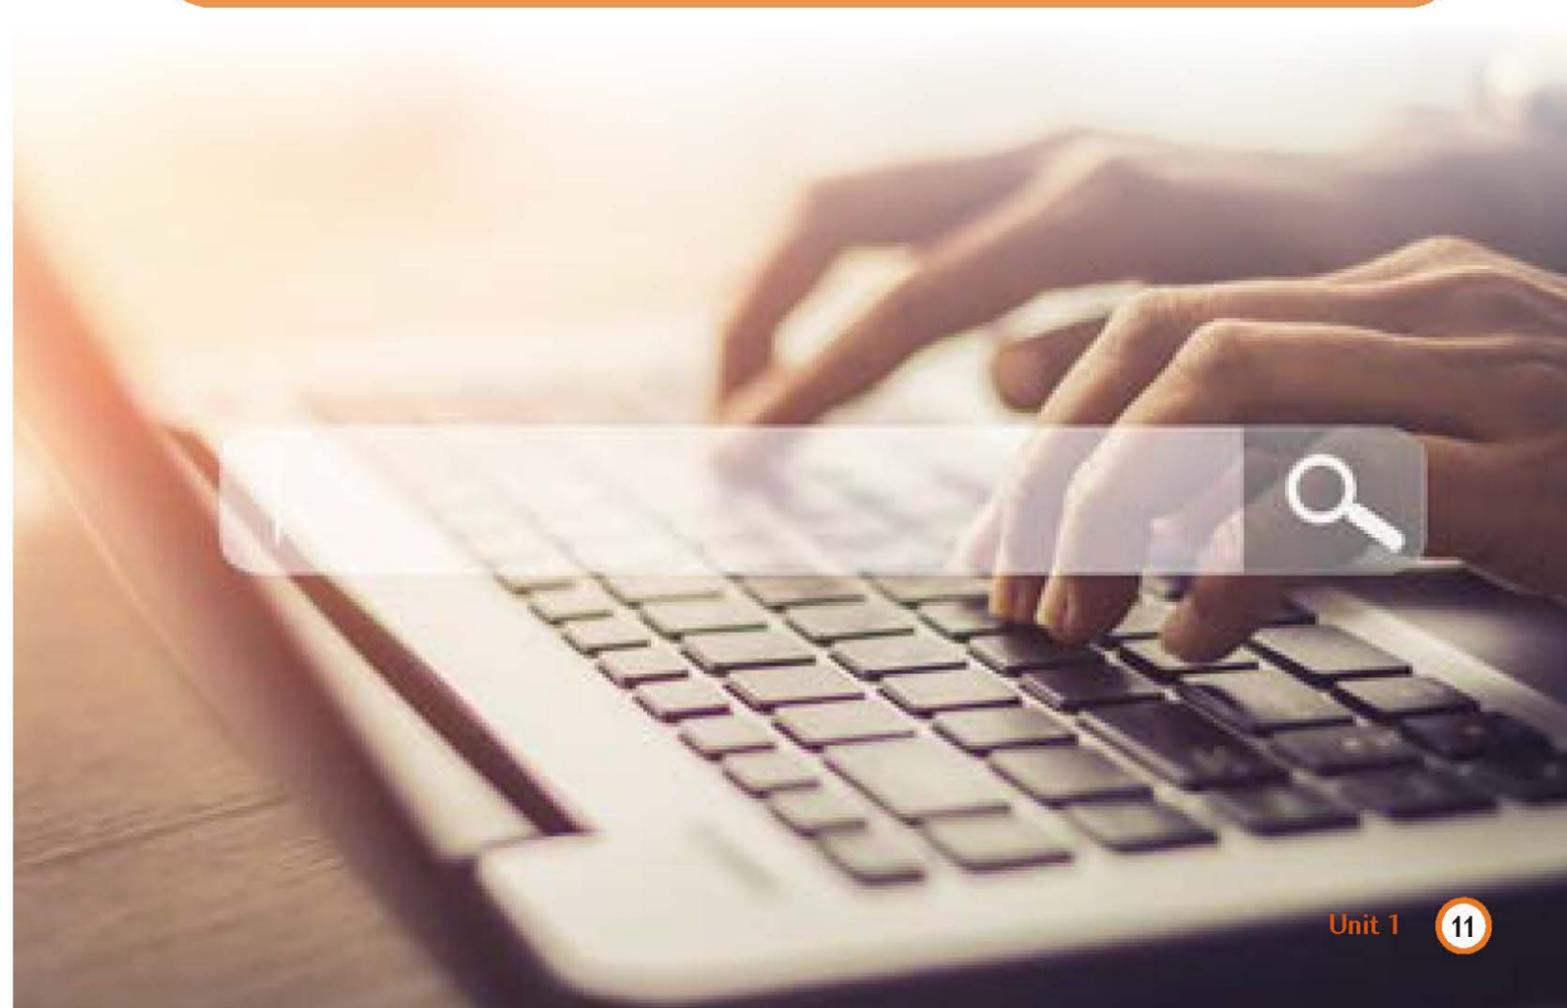

Using specific words and questions is the skill you need when looking for information online. Before you start a search, it is important to enter specific words rather than general words. Using general words will give you much information you do not need. For example, “skill” is general, and “online research skill” is more specific. Besides using specific words, you can also use specific questions, such as “What are the important online research skills?” Using different specific words and questions can help you find the different information you need.

A Check the key words or questions that are more specific.

1. college students
 the number of college students
 How many college students are there in your country?
2. smartphones
 the first smartphone
 Who knows smartphones?
3. Taipei 101
 the history of Taipei 101
 What is Taipei 101?

B Collaborative Practice: Work in pairs. Search online to find information about how to keep a diary. Use three specific words / questions for the research and complete the chart below.

Specific words / questions:
1.	2.	3.
What information did you find? Write some keywords.
1.	2.	3.

Track 2 Skim the text and answer the questions.

1. What type of writing is this?
2. To whom is this written?

My Diary

February 20, 1981

Dear Diary,

Today is a special day. Two years ago, I arrived here in Iowa in America after leaving my home in Vietnam. I remember the black night that Daddy, Mommy, and my older sister Ping got onto a very crowded boat and silently¹ floated down the river, hoping no one would see us. We were running away from the war that had hurt many people and made it hard to find food to eat. We were leaving our country for another country. It was dark and I was very scared. I tried not to show Ping that I was scared.

When we arrived in Iowa, I started 3rd grade in the local school. I felt lost. It was cold, but I liked the feeling of the winter wind on my face. I didn't know anyone at first, and I didn't speak any English. Boupha, a girl from Cambodia, was in my class, and we went together to a special English class every day. I was so happy when I learned my first long sentence "I got here two months ago." Later I learned the word "refugee" and I was happy to know that my family were not the only people that needed to run away from bad things.

That year I made my first snowman. I remember feeling a little sad when the cold winter ended and the spring came. Then mommy told me that winter would come again next year, and I was happy.

Things are much better now. There are a lot of Vietnamese families here, so I feel relaxed when I speak my own language. I have new American friends here now, too, Todd and Craig, and I speak English with them. My favorite things are playing baseball with my team, drawing in art class, and when we have pizza at school!

See you tomorrow, diary!
